The Growing Need for Population Health Management: Steps to Improving Diabetes Outcomes

Program Overview

This program gives an overview on the growing prevalence of diabetes in the United States, the transition towards a value-based health care system, and how population health management can assist in the care of patients with diabetes.

Objectives

- Review challenges with diabetes management in the US and understand the implications of these short-comings in diabetes management
- Discuss the move from Fee-for-Service to Value-Based care and the need to increasingly focus on managing outcomes, in particular patients with an A1c >9%
- Review and discuss efficient approaches to proactively improve outcomes for diabetes patients at most risk, by applying a simple and practical Population Health Management approach in the office
